TECH AND SURVEILLANCE IN INTIMATE PARTNER VIOLENCE with KAREN LEVY

Karen Levy is an assistant professor of information science at Cornell University and affiliated faculty at Cornell Law School. Her research considers social, ethical, and legal dimensions of emerging technologies with an emphasis on surveillance and privacy. She is particularly interested in how technologies intervene in the contexts of workplace dynamics and intimate relationships. She holds a Ph.D. in sociology from Princeton and a J.D. from Indiana University.
